Cheque? Cheque!

When you go to collect your cheque next Tuesday morning, July 2 (that's when they'll be in), don't be surprised if you are greeted by a fond and affectionate "Good morning," from a smiling D.V.A. Counsellor. As you sign your cheque, his silky voice will most probably inquire whether "everything is all right," and you will be very considerate, and keep your temper. But as you walk out of the door, and he pulls out a whisk brush to clean the dandruff off your shoulders—well, we don't blame you!!

To get down to cases, though, there will be a D.V.A. Counsellor in attendance when you draw your cheques. If there is some discrepancy in the amount you receive, or if your cheque has not come through, he is the man to see.

University vs. Land Act

If any vets on the campus have the vision of themselves with a text-book in one hand and a mowing machine in the other, they had better start to reconsider.

Latest information from Ottawa points to the probability that present provisions permitting a veteran to take full University course under D.V.A. and obtaining Veteran Land Act benefits will be cancelled. Under consideration now, this will mean that a veteran will have to choose between a university training or Land Act benefits.

"VETS DO"—WHAT?

After three hectic "do's," the Entertainment Committee of the Vets' Society has finally recuperated sufficiently to plan its Mark IV affair.

On Friday, July 5, the Officers' Mess of the Currie Gym will be the scene of another debacle. Seen on the scene (perhaps) will be bevy of beautiful, bouncing, blondes. Well, anyway, the Committee is inviting the French Summer School females.

Our contact man on the Committee informs us of the following: "The doings" start at 5 p.m., and admission is 25 cents." He smiled wryly as he added, "there will also be plenty of stimulating liquid refreshment."

COWEDS CLUB

New officers were elected at a recent meeting of the Dawson Coweds Club held in the lounge of the Coweds Corner, where married students and their wives meet for social relaxation.

A suggestion that the club be incorporated in the Student's Council was widely discussed. J. Diamond was elected president on a standing vote, and R. V. Kovacks (vice-pres.), J. Porter (secretary), J. Ouellette (treasurer), and Eric Willis (social chairman) were elected without opposition.

A proposal that the name of the club be changed was defeated by the members with the explanation that the present name fully represented what the Club stands for.

There was general amusement when Eric Willis and Mrs. Scott acquainted the members with the elaborate precautions that had been taken to safeguard the recreation room from the inquisitive wander-

Tickets on Sale In Tuck Shop at Reduced Rates

By L. ERIC TOMKINSON

Plans for the Social Committee's first major event, Belmont Park Night, have now been completed with tickets already placed on sale, it was learned last night. Scheduled to take place this coming Wednesday, July 3, Belmont Park Night offers the first real opportunity for all summer students to take part in an off-campus event.

40% REDUCTION

The outcome of the committee's haggling with the proprietors of the amusement park was a forty per cent. reduction in the admission price to all the park's various attractions. Further, the group in charge of arrangements agreed that uniform transportation would aid in fostering McGill spirit, and so a streetcar was chartered. It will leave from the corner of University and St. Catherine streets at 7.30.

Tickets on Sale

Tickets for the event are now on sale at the Tuck Shop in the Union, and can also be obtained in the Arts Buildings at Walter's office. Students wanting additional tickets will be able to buy them at Belmont Park, at the picnic booth on the midway, upon showing the top part of the script ticket originally purchased.

At the first general meeting of McGill summer students a program of summer activities for those attending the university's summer classes was outlined. Belmont Park Night will be one of the first major social events in this summer program and the committee feels that the full support by the summer students of this affair will encourage it to go ahead with plans for further social activities throughout the summer session.

The committee feels that the outdoor dancing at Belmont Park should encourage a large turnout for this event. In addition to dancing (from 6.30 until closing) there will be a movie commencing at 9 p.m., and a free attraction at 11 p.m. There are also many exciting whirlabouts and humorous rides.

WANTED.

The Daily has need of a photographer with a camera to take pictures for publication in the McGill Daily. Any student who may be interested, please contact Perc Tallman or Al Tunis in The Daily Office.

Ross Assistant Dean During Summer Term

Dr. Bruce Ross, assistant professor of mathematics, is acting as Assistant Dean and Admitting Officer for Arts, Science and Commerce, in the absence of Dr. Hatcher.

Dr. Hatcher has been granted leave of absence from June 15 until September 15, since he was unable to take any vacation during the war years.

RVC Takes A.N.A. House For Girl Vets

McGill ex-service women are to have a residence of their own in the shape of the former A.N.A. House at 3458 Ontario Avenue. This was announced by Dr. Roscoe, Dean of Women, as an important measure in the drive to provide living quarters for the women students.

A.N.A. House is expected to be completely reconverted and ready for occupancy by September 25. It will house forty single women veterans in double and single rooms, and dormitories. Plans have been made to outfit a comfortable lounge and a study. Accommodation for women students now stands at a total of 277: 137 at R.V.C., 30 at MacLennan Hall, 40 at A.N.A. House, and 70 at Strathcona Hall, which has been increased from 62. "All women students in residences will now take their meals at a new cafeteria which is being made in R.V.C. The cafeteria now at Strathcona Hall will not operate next term.

The rates at A.N.A. House are announced as $320 for the 8 month term, which is on a scale comparable to that at Dawson. All women veterans who are interested should file application immediately with Royal Victoria College who has charge of all women residences.

Shelter Units To House Vets At Macdonald

Further information has been released on the housing situation at Macdonald College. One hundred emergency shelter units are being converted into residences for married couples and single ex-service-men.

Accommodation will be provided for sixty married couples, with or without children, and for 160 single students. Of this total, it is expected that room will be available for twenty couples from McGill, the remainder being reserved for those attending Macdonald College. It may be found that there will be some room for McGill ex-service-men who would wish to commute, but since the enrollment at Macdonald is anticipated to exceed 800 next fall, students at the agricultural college will be given first preference.

For couples with children, two rooms and a kitchenette, with a standard bathroom for every two units, will be provided. For couples without children there will be one room and a kitchenette. The living room will measure 12' 6" by 17', the bedroom 10' by 12', and the kitchen 10 by 6'. Applicants are reminded that these accommodations are eligible to veterans only. Those interested should make application with Colin MacDougall, Room 15, Arts Building, immediately.

Dominion Day

There will be no lectures or laboratory periods held on Dominion Day, Monday, July 1, since it is a statutory holiday.

T. H. MATTHEWS,
Registrar.

Vets Plan Mk.IV Do At Gym on July 5

The MK IV edition of the "Vets Do" will take place at the C.O. T.C. Officers' Mess in The Sir Arthur Currie Memorial Gym on Friday, July 5, from 5 to 8 p.m.

The evening will consist of dancing to a Wurlitzer, during which liquid and light refreshments will be served. There is a special inducement for both stags and couples. In the former case, a special invitation will be extended to the girls of the French Summer School, while for the latter, the admission fee of 25 cents has been dropped for girls.

Tickets will not be sold, as formerly, at Walter's office or the Tuck Shop. Instead, the charge will be collected at the door.

Film Society Shows 'River' Next Week

By JAY JACKSON

Water — great, green stretches of it — foaming, billowing, frothy waves — cool, cool, rippling circles, spreading out and out until they leave the eye; or crashing, boiling, bubbling water, savage water, menacing water, yet always cool, cool, cool. Feel better yet? Has that choking feeling abated slightly? Perhaps you will have to wait until the McGill Film Society brings right to the Biology Building next Tuesday at 5.05 p.m. both the Mississippi River and the Pacific Ocean, imported specially for sweltering summer students.

The second bill of the Summer Season features Pare Lorenz' classic documentary, "The River," a beautiful pictorial study of the Mississippi River; not just the river but the work it does; not just the river, but the people who live on it and by it and along it; not just the river, but an entire way of life. Here is material for the sociologist and the geographer, for the economist and the artist.

"Herring Hunt" is the title of the second film on the program. Entirely in colour, and filmed at set, it will afford an opportunity for all those who love effortless fishing. They will be able to relax, race across the Pacific swell after the silver herring hordes, while the spray splashes all about them. What a way to get cool!

CUP Consolidates Student Opinion Across Canada

By KEITH TISSHAW

If anybody ever looks closely at the masthead of this paper, they will notice a small line in italics which reads "President and Secretary, Canadian University Press."

The Canadian University Press, commonly known as the CUP, is a college newspaper organization serving university publications stretching from Halifax to Vancouver.

This service entails the exchange of paper, and last session a wire service was also instituted. The wire service was run on an experimental basis in order to test the feasibility of fast news exchange. This system proved to be an outstanding success, with wires containing newsworthy items coming from all parts of the country, including the Army's "Expedition Musk-Ox" in the wilds of the north.

The CUP was born on New Year's Day of 1938 at Winnipeg, when representatives of 12 Canadian College publications met to discuss the possibility of setting up a country-wide news system, which would have the effect of consolidating student opinion and abolishing sectionalism.

The aim has been realised in many ways today, with the regular exchange of editorials and feature material, as well as news. This exchange of opinion has helped to consolidate many campus organizations, such as veteran's societies (Continued on Page 4)

Appeal Made for Help on Farms By Labour Minister to Students

The threat of starvation faces people of many countries today. In a letter to Dr. James, Principal of McGill University, Mr. A. MacNamara, Deputy Minister of Labour for Canada, has made a special appeal for students to accept summer employment either on farm or in food processing plants this summer. Following are the letters of Mr. MacNamara and Dr. James to The Daily.

Dear Dr. James:

Since early this year, the National Employment Service and the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel, have been active in organizing the placement of students who desired employment for the summer months. Many students have secured steady employment until they go back to university. There are others who may be available for employment or who will become available during the summer.

Knowing that the threat of starvation to many countries is a matter of grave concern to all Canadians, a special appeal is being made to these students to accept employment either on farm or in food processing plants this summer.

I realize that in most universities, the regular college year is now completed, but it may be possible for you to appeal by letter or by other means to students, even though they have left the campus.

There will be others attending summer sessions, who may be available to help after the summer courses are over and before the fall term commences. Their assistance, (Continued on Page 4)

With renewed good wishes, I remain,
Very sincerely yours,
F. CYRIL JAMES,
Principal and Vice-Chancellor.

NOTICE

Arrangements for the swimming party are going ahead and it is planned to have tickets on sale early next week.

Not So Europe

Scenes such as the above are familiar across Canada as the school year closes. No such carefree happiness for children in Europe. Lack of clothing prevents many from attending school. Of those who do, a large number do so at the expense of their brothers and sisters whose scraps of clothing are pooled to give them enough to wear.

'Three Bares' Reveal History In Exclusive Daily Interview

By AL TUNIS

One of the most familiar landmarks at McGill is the marble statue of the three muscular men bearing some mysterious burden upon their backs. Known affectionately as the "Three Bares," these stalwart figures have time and again defied investigation into their past.

Reporter Investigates

With the grim determination and grit common to all newspaper reporters, your correspondent approached the "unapproachable gentlemen," and engaged them in an amiable conversation—a conversation which was to smash down the barrier of secrecy which has always surrounded these well known figures.

With typical subtlety, I nonchalantly asked the first three questions basic to the newspaper reporting business: When, Why, and Who?

"Bares" Respond

"Well," said the oldest "Bare," casually flicking an ant from his left big toe. "We were first put here in the year 1931. Let me see," he scratched his hard skull, "oh, yes, I remember. It was in May, during Convocation, and when Sir Arthur Currie was the principal of the University."

The second "Bare" shifted his burden from his right to his left shoulder; the basin teetered dangerously. "Believe it or not," he commented humorously, "we are a fountain. We were donated to McGill by friends of the University in the United States. As a matter of fact, Dr. John Finley, the then Editor-in-Chief of the New York Times, when he made the presentation, said that we were a 'souvenir of the United States' neighbourly love for Canada."

"Bares" Found Modest

The third "Bare" blushed violently as I openly admired their well-built and muscular figures. "Yes," he said modestly, "Mrs. Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney, our sculptress, certainly knew her business. Actually, we were to be presented in 1930, but because of the untimely death of her husband, Harry Payne Whitney, the presentation was postponed for a year."

There were many more questions that I would have liked to ask, when the eldest "Bare" commented: "Judging by my shadow on the ground, it's about 2 p.m. Haven't you got a lecture?"

I took the hint, thanked them for the entertaining conversation, and hurried away. When I got home that night, I took off my shirt, and with a tremendous feeling of inferiority, I gazed at my sickly, puny frame in the mirror.

Tyros Take Over Architects' Work

New arrivals to the campus this morning will be a horde of placards pointing out the necessity of giving old clothes to the people in Europe. The story behind these posters is one unique to the summer students.

Normally, all such poster work on the campus is handled by the architects, but during the summer months no house-designers attend McGill. So, when the need for posters became apparent, members of the publicity committee of the Summer Council buckled down to a task new to most of them. Unskilled fingers painfully wrought upon paper the placards to be seen on the campus this morning.

Fr. Summer School Opens Friday

By BETTY BREWER

Preparations for the opening of the McGill Summer School are under way as over 200 students from such distant points as Florida and California in the United States, and Vancouver Island in Canada take up their residence at Strathcona and Douglas Halls. Lectures commence on Friday, June 28.

Californian Interviewed

One of the three first arrivals to Strathcona Hall where French Summer School students hang their hats is a bronzed, blond veteran from Southern California. Other students in the school are due to arrive tomorrow but this young man, having jumped the others to the gun was heading towards the courts for a quick game of tennis when your reporter waylaid him at the door.

A typical McGill student, he seemed to know almost nothing about the courses offered in the school. There are a number of courses available and each student has five options.

Approves of McGill

Houses Short In South Africa

Johannesburg, South Africa, June 26.—(Exchange)—The conditions of university life on this continent are the subject of constant criticism, but they seem to be just as bad in South Africa.

The University of Witwatersrand reports that it is overcrowded due to the influx of veterans, and there is also a critical housing shortage.

It is estimated that 60,000 houses are needed immediately, and if the situation is to be alleviated 475,000 houses must be constructed within the next ten years. Veterans are offered a loan of 90 per cent. of the cost of a new house, but there are no new houses available.

All housing plans in the Union are being held up by the acute shortage of lumber and certain other building materials. There is also a lack of workers, as there is a colour bar in the construction trade. At the present time the cost of land is inflated, and the price of new houses is almost prohibitive, due to the large amount of skilled labor needed to build such dwellings.

The University authorities have erected "hutments" on the lawns of the campus to alleviate the present lack of accommodation.

Drive Lasts Until June 29

Last minute efforts to swell McGill's contribution to the National Clothing Collection Week swing into action today when a fresh and novel program of clothing donations is implemented, Alex Morris, chairman of the McGill Clothing Committee announced today. The drive officially comes to a close on Saturday, June 29.

Initiated by the Summer Committee of the Students' Executive Council on June 18, the Drive has had its headquarters in the McGill Union, where shoes, old suits, dresses, and many other miscellaneous articles of clothing have filled a bin to overflowing.

LARGE RESPONSE EXPECTED.

The Committee feels, that with the large summer enrolment at the University, a larger and more complete response is desirable. "A far greater contribution can be expected from McGill," said the chairman, "and because of the extreme plight of the people of Europe, and their outstanding necessity for clothes, we are making a last minute appeal to McGill students to take a final inventory of all their old clothes."

NOVEL DRIVE PLANNED.

Taking on a novel aspect, the Drive will be conducted on the east campus, which will be "dressed up" for the purpose. The Committee has embarked on a rather humorous and ambitious program: Clothes racks and clothing hooks will regale the 'Stately elms'; partially unclad dummies will stand patiently on the grass waiting to be dressed; signs and posters will add a dash of color, as well as serving to remind both students and outsiders to contribute.

Lack of space, the Committee feels, has resulted in a lower contribution than was expected. With the new set-up on the campus however, there will be no space restrictions, and the contributions will be correspondingly larger. The novelty of the program as well, should lend to the success of the campaign.

To show that a student has donated some article of clothing to the drive, individual button-tags will be presented to donors. The Committee stresses the importance for each student to do his utmost to make a thorough investigation of his wardrobe, so that maximum results may be expected. "Wardrobes are deceptive things," said the chairman of the committee, "and unless one really gets down to a thorough inventory, the chances are that one is liable to think that he has nothing superfluous to donate. And nine times out of ten, he has."

CORRECTION.

The Daily wishes to correct a story which appeared in last week's issue stating that Lachine will accommodate 42 single men. This figure should read 432 upper year male single veterans.

A CURE FOR GROWING PAINS

"What a talented young man, I wonder how long he'll stay in Canada?" How many times we have heard these words. And how many more times have we witnessed the general exodus of talent from this country! Many writers and speakers have commented on this fact in the last few years, and the steady stream of scientists, artists and writers has continued unimpeded just the same. What are we going to do about it? Canada is a young country, full of strength and promise; that strength and promise has already produced some results in the form of many Canadian scientific achievements, some Canadian literature and a considerable amount of Canadian painting. But whatever is best in these fields is created by men and women who eventually leave Canada for the United States or at least work for the much more impressive salaries of that country.

The veteran apologist for Canada's inability to keep her talent within her cultural boundaries will of course answer that a small or poor country like Canada can not possibly hope to compete with the financial resources of the United States. Very well, we accept the fact that a poverty stricken country which is not under such moral pressure as was France during the occupation, where moral pressure produced much in the way of culture in spite of poverty—that such country will not be likely to contribute much to the intellectual development of the world. But, we wonder, is Canada as poor as all that? Is this country really unable to support a cultural life of its own?

Though there may be many facts and figures to back up the argument of our veteran apologist, we believe that the trouble lies not with a shortage of cash, or in other words, the impossibility of paying decent salaries to those who create; but rather that the attitude of most Canadians is definitely hostile towards intellectual work.

Books, to many, are either text books for school-children or dime thrillers for streetcar rides. Poetry, well, that stuff helps to make popular croon-songs more croonable. Painting, oh, that's half undressed, unnaturally long-limbed and full-bodied females on calendars. And science... science produces DDT to kill bugs. So long as this attitude prevails there will never be any money for intellectual progress and achievement, that does not conform with these standards.

Now, after a war that has broken down many social and economic barriers, the time seems ripe for a drastic change. No country can ever achieve adult status without a sound heritage of culture. Generations to come will still lament the 'youth' of this country unless a change is made now.

Once again we turn to the Universities to solve our problem. Here men and women from all walks of life are studying to improve their minds in every possible way. Economic barriers which hitherto made a university education a luxury have been destroyed, and there is every hope that once the shadows of war have been dispersed the barriers will not rise again.

Surely Canada's young men and women will now have the vision to look history squarely in the face. Surely they will realize that the old suspicions which have been thrown in the path of progress, and the old misrepresentations and misunderstandings which have disfigured that progress, surely they will realize that all this will only lead to a perpetual but thoroughly unhealthy youthfulness and immaturity for Canada.

There is a pressing and crying need for a sound and far-sighted attitude towards higher education in Canada. If our young men and women will leave their universities upon graduation with a newly acquired basis of knowledge and a high regard for its values and products, then, we are sure, the money to 'pay' for the maintenance and preservation of a culture will suddenly and miraculously appear, and the fundamental growing pains of Canada will have been cured for ever.—C.W.

Would You End War? Create Great Peace

(Ed. Note: This editorial is reprinted from "Wu's Views," the student journal of the University of Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa.)

After six years of war, the University has now, more than ever, a special duty to fulfil, not only within itself as an institution of learning, creating and producing scholars and technicians, but as yet another of the many dynamic entities which co-operate to produce an effective State. Like all these others, it must offer its contribution to the creation and maintenance of the Peace.

The contribution of the University must be that of citizens—men and women in all walks of life who will assume their places in society and fulfil their mutual obligations in the most efficient manner. They must, above all, be thinking men and women not blindly motivated by impulses and emotions, but rational people, well adjusted within their community and aspiring towards the general good.

These citizens of the future must be tolerant of others and respectful of their views. They must develop a liberal attitude of mind, and be impervious to the destructive machinations of race hatred. They must strive for the universal application of the fundamental rights of man, and pay full recognition to leadership and capability in anyone, regardless of race or creed. They must not think within the narrow confines of individualism, but with an eye to everything as forming eventually part of a whole.

They must seek endlessly for knowledge, and utilize it in all its branches to the fullest extent for the benefit of all; they must glean widely from philosophy. Then, they in turn must educate their children towards citizenship and instill in them the fervour to create something glorious out of the Peace.

The war has destroyed much for mankind both spiritually and materially. It remains with the multitude of the living to resolve a new scheme of values in life, to create a purposeful aim for the future, by justifying themselves as humanistic cultured citizens, so that in the future, having achieved these things they may say in all truth:—

"E quindi usemmo a rividere le Stelle."
"Then we came forth to behold each star."

The Dates Committee

The Summer Committee of the Students' Executive Council has taken an important step to coordinate the extra-curricular activities of students during this summer. At the last meeting of the Council Committee it was decided to perpetuate the Dates Committee, one of the most important sub-committees of the regular Council. In the winter the Dates Committee, composed usually of the Chairman of the Athletics Council, the President of the Women's Union and the President of the Men's Union with the President of the Students' Society as an ex-officio member, has the duty of supervising the time-table of student activities throughout the session. With the many activities of the winter terms such a committee is of the greatest importance, for only through its constant vigilance can conflicting dances, meetings and club-functions be avoided and a maximum efficiency in campus activity be assured.

During the summer term, with student activities on a much smaller scale, it has been found that such a committee is still of the greatest importance; for now it is particularly important that students may be able to derive the maximum amount of benefit from their activities, and that overlapping and conflicting events are avoided.

It is our sincere hope that every campus club and organization functioning during the summer will cooperate with the Dates Committee to the fullest. The Committee will hold its first meeting this week and further information concerning its rules and decisions will be published shortly.—C.W.

McGill Film Society

by Sue Ketchum

The first summer showing of the McGill Film Society, which took place on Tuesday was highly successful. Despite the extreme heat, and the lure of tennis courts and swimming pools, at least fifty 'keen types' were present. And from the quality of the films shown, it was well worth their while.

"The City" was not shown until the end of the program, but it was by far the most important both from the social and the personal view point. The first two shorts were smooth, leisurely and allowed you to draw your own conclusions.

Not so "The City". Produced by the Carnegie Corporation, it used many narrators and harsh background music, to set in sharp relief the more disgusting phases of city life. In this it became a typical American appeal to the emotions. Fortunately the very soundness of its material prevented the handicap from becoming too great.

This film wanted to show the need for reform and the advantage in planning our cities. It did—with some effect.

The directors were particularly able in showing the 'hurry, hurry, hurry' of city life. By well chosen scenes of crowds, traffic jams and slums, it showed just how miserable urban life can be. And by pointing out what has been done when cities are planned, it revealed how absolutely unnecessary all this misery is.

In all its efforts to reveal the city at its worst, the film was best when commenting on our eating habits. So clever and accurate were the shots of lunch counters and hot-dog stands, hardly a person could come away without feeling the sharp pain of ulcers, or the embarrassment of an untimely 'burp'.

In putting across the main point—our cities are unwholesome and unfit to live in—"The City" was successful. The scene was New York, but the approach is so sweeping that it embraces Montreal and every other Canadian city which suffers from overcrowding.

Yet "The City" did fail occasionally. While the revelation of the slums in their filth and squalor was compelling, it was not complete. It should have stressed the effect these surroundings have on people. It is not enough to see backhouses and dirty yards. We should also have been shown the packed juvenile courts, the prostitution and all other forms of evil which accompany such conditions.

When dealing with a planned suburb, the producers might have shown how the suburb was built. They might have laid emphasis on the need for foresight—on the absolute necessity of every one of us using our energies and influence to make quite certain that all slums are speedily removed, and that the conditions which gave rise to them are never permitted to recur.

"The Private Life of the Gannet" was the subject of the first film shown, and its setting was the tiny group of islands off the south-west coast of Wales—Grassholm.

Resembling sea gulls in form, Gannets are much larger, having a wing spread of six feet, long curved beaks, and sharp silvery eyes. Besides having the most accurate directional sense of any creature in existence, they have another more spectacular characteristic—they are fishers. Not so unusual among birds you may say, but the method of fishing used by the Gannet is indeed spectacular. They dive from a great height and plunge deep into the ocean, sometimes a hundred feet down, in search of their prey. They will soar above a school of fish and suddenly drop downward. Their wings are not folded until the minute they hit the water, and then the bird disappears from sight leaving a long trail of bubbles. Finally he reappears with a full stomach.

If a Gannet has young to feed, it will fly back to Grassholm, back to the nest with its catch. But the young bird has to work for its supper. The mother bird opens her mouth, and down he reaches, as far as he can get his long neck, and pulls out a fish from "the cupboard". This goes on until he is full, when he allows the mother to digest the remainder.

Due to the painstaking efforts of the cameramen, and the fine commentary, this was a most enjoyable short film, on what might have been a very dull subject.

The third film shown was "Monkey into Man", an interesting picture representation of the Darwinian theory.

And then there is the minister presiding at a funeral who said: "Friends, all that remains here is the shell, the nut is gone."

TO ALTHEA

(From Yale Literary Magazine)

As distilled water soon offends the taste,
And gold without some baser metal bends,
So every fault with which this lady's graced
To her tall beauty new enchantment lends.
Thus have I flattered her untutored ear,
And fashioned of her faults ingenious praise
And made the worst the better cause appear,
And consciously corrupted my best days.
A poor dishonest lawyer must be paid,
When by ill art he's let rank guilt go free,
So for my lies I asked return be made,
And all my price was but her constancy.

Now could I sue for that defaulted fee,
But beauty's bankrupt and no use to me.

NAMELESS

The whirling wings of night,
The sucking vortex of the sky,
The moaning rush of stars,
And I am drawn, indrawn,
By the groan and torment,
And the life of life,
Forever sucking, training,
Vacuum strong,
And empty, as the airless moon.

From earth to star is many a year,
From star to star the parsec flies.
And man, a speck on dust stands here,
"Tell, what am I" sick tide of aching cries.

Is there ever the glorious knowing,
Is ever a rapture of having, of holding,
Is there peace, is there end of this search,
Of this sorrow?

Night wings whirl on,

Letters to the Editor

Friday, June 20, 1946.

The Editor,
McGill Daily.

Sir,—On behalf of the Students' Forum, it is my duty to point out that your report in last week's Daily of Mr. Naegele's talk, first of the Lunchtime Lectures at the Union, did not do justice to the speaker, nor did it live up to your usual standard of reporting.

By using quotations without regard to their context, an unfortunate impression was given—I am convinced quite unintentionally—that the lecturer's attitude towards his subject was a rather flippant one. On the contrary, I am sure that anyone who was present will readily agree that this lecture on University Education was serious, stimulating, and brilliantly developed. The audience's rapt attention and enthusiastic response, plus the many pleased comments heard about the campus, are testimony to this.

The writer is familiar with the distressing conditions under which a small, overworked group of conscientious people are turning out a remarkably good Daily this summer. But he knows too, that if through a faulty emphasis in a hurriedly written story, you have unwittingly done less than justice, you will welcome this uncritical criticism, written only with the desire to set the record straight. It is the least we can do in appreciation of Mr. Naegele's excellent services.

Yours truly,
THE STUDENTS' FORUM
Per JAY JACKSON.

(Ed. Note:—The Daily's apologies to the Student Forum and Mr. Jackson. Necessarily our reports are often subjective in nature; although we do not encourage such an attitude, it cannot always be avoided. We are sorry that our report did not conform with the general impression of the meeting as expressed by Mr. Jackson.)

Wine but No Women

Should the wine taster say to me "I find Sandeman's has a more satisfying flavour than Gonzalez", I would go off and drink nothing but Sandeman's for the rest of my life. If the tea taster were to advise "I think you will find that Lipton's has a pleasanter taste than Salada", I could never buy another pound of Salada again. The words of the wine taster and the tea taster are simple words, but I listen. Why? Because they are qualified and experienced men. Because by not smoking or taking highly seasoned foods, they have preserved their sensitivity to taste. Their judgment is sound.

Is mine?—No. I have ruined by judgment by gluttonous feasts of Look, Life, Time and Zippy Stories. Unlike the wine taster who swirls the blessed liquid about his palate and around his tongue until his whole body knows what it drinks, I have bolted my readings in indigestible masses. Unlike the tea taster who demands his tea in its purest form i.e. without cream and sugar, I ask for flavorless concentrates from the Reader's Digest. Intemperance has so dulled my appreciation of a good book that I no longer know what I read.

Eating and drinking compare well with reading for it will illustrate yet another point. If from the age of fourteen I have loved the lemon pies my mother makes, I do not blush when I ask for the same pie at twenty-four. But to admit that I still like Richard Halliburton or Capt. Frank H. Shaw is more than I dare. The world permits me a 'young' stomach but not a 'young' taste in reading.

I just play with thoughts, must play with thoughts because preceding "my preference in reading" should be "my purpose in reading".

and I have no one purpose to drive, no one ambition to lead me through the mass of useless books on to the one subject and the few authors who will serve me well.

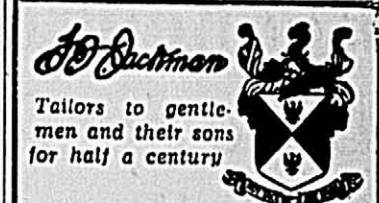

This is bad, very bad, for I wander through Swift, toy with Douglas and trifle with Dumas. Even this might be acceptable if I gained some wider knowledge, but the book I read today cancels the essay I read yesterday. I am left with nothing but the continued desire to read. I am left with a desire that is like a terrible thirst which I don't know how or where to quench.

Say, driver, what's the idea of stopping?

I thought I heard someone tell me to.

Drive on, she wasn't talking to you.

—The Ubyesey.

Red Team Defeats St. Johns

Pitcher Is Russ Norman FIRST WIN

Opening Ball Game Of Inter-City Loop Next Tuesday

Displaying a brand of attack that bodes ill for their opponents in the Inter-City Intermediate league, McGill's baseball team eluded out an impressive win over the more highly publicized, Dawson club to the tune of 11-3 at St. Johns on Monday night.

The game, played on the newly laid out, smoothly surfaced diamond, was keenly contested for the first two innings with the fast running Dawson squad on the long end of a 3-2 count at the end of this period. Nothing daunted, the locals went right to work, in their half of the third frame, clubbing big Bob (Dynamo) Bartlett's fast ball all over the lot for a total of six hits and seven runs, to take a commanding lead which was never thereafter threatened. They added their last two and clinching runs in the top half of the fifth on two hits and three stolen bases.

FIRST MEETING

This was the first clash between these two teams and also marked their initial appearances in their natty, new uniforms. Dawson will get a chance to avenge their honor when the teams meet again on July 2nd in the opening game of the league schedule. This game is slated for Fletcher's Field but may be played at Dawson because of the superiority of the latter field. Judging by Monday's game the competition will be keen all through the season from all the teams in the league.

Only five complete innings were played due to the late start of the contest, which did not get under way until seven o'clock.

POOR START

The Redmen got off to a poor start, in the first inning, going down in order before Bartlett's high hard one. Russ Norman starting on the hill for McGill was just as effective and moved down the home team as they appeared at the plate.

The second canto was a different story as both teams got their hitting eye and scored a total of five runs, two being credited to the visitors and the remaining three going up beside the big D on the score board.

In the third chukker, successive hits by Wilson, Wregg, Greco and Greatrex drove the Dawson hurler to the comparative anonymity of the third base coaching box, from whence he continued to throw verbal fireballs. Byers took over the throwing chores for the home club and was treated in similar fashion to his predecessor, being touched for two more hits and four more runs before retiring the side.

TURNING POINT

This was the turning point of the game and McGill were in no danger from then on. Just to make sure they added two unearned runs in the fifth off the offerings of Holmes the last and most effective of the Dawson chuckers. Chalkin pitched the last two innings for McGill and held the opposition hitless. Russ Norman received credit for the win and Bob Bartlett was charged with the loss.

Local Fencing Club Commences Activities

Tonight at seven, the Currie Gymnasium will resound to the clash of foils as the McGill Fencing Club gets under way with their summer program. As all city clubs will be operating during the summer months, the local fencers will be in top shape by the time that inter-club competition starts again in the fall.

Any aspiring swordsmen among the new students are invited to turn out, previous experience not being required by the coach. We are fortunate in having as coach Mr. George Tulley, formerly Dominion fencing champion, who will be on hand for tonight's session.

Everybody is welcome, both male and female. It is not necessary to bring any equipment as the club has some on hand. Further information can be had by phoning Miss Le Brosq, at WI 4585.

CUES by CUE-BALL

If the negotiations that your live wire columnist is now in the process of hatching (we also lay eggs) are successful, the woes of the campus snooker devotees will be ended. No longer will it be necessary to begrudgingly take the occasional hour off from a lecture in order to complete an unfinished match. Free time, formerly spent in the billiard-room, can now be utilized in the so-called necessity of study. All of this will tend to increase the already high standards of our university.

Following the example set by Penn State, south of the border, which has established a credit course on Fishing, we are planning to and the subject of Snooker to the McGill curriculum. After an experimental term in which the varied techniques of piscatorial endeavour were taught, the eminent institution in Penna. has decided that sufficient benefit was received by the students in order to classify it as a regular course.

If recognition has been granted to such a pseudo-science, we see no reason why we should not acknowledge the educational potentialities of Snooker. It is our plan to establish on our campus a department in which the origins and finer techniques of the noble pastime would be expounded to overflowing classes. Courses on the history of Billiards would tell how Louis XIV of France would play the game in order to improve his digestion. Leading geometrists would give instruction on side angle shots, while rapt students would gaze on great masters of the sport exhibiting ways of making impossible shots.

Up to the present these plans have been shown to the curriculum committee, who referred to us to the athletics department who referred us to the president of the Union who was out. If anything further should develop on this project, you will be informed of it by means of this column.

Softball Play Briefly Halted

Competitive softball activity around McGill has been at a temporary standstill for the past two weeks due to the unexpected cancellation of last Wednesday night's scheduled league game against Dawson.

The Redmen, however, have not allowed the dust on the upper stadium diamond much of an opportunity to stay settled. Still smarting under the sting of their defeat at the hands of the Georgians two weeks ago, the locals are hard at work attempting to compensate for their deficiencies by strenuous practicing.

Practice sessions were held on three separate occasions this past week, at which new candidates were given a chance to gain a berth on the Intercollegiate squad. According to manager Ed MacLachlan, many promising newcomers have made their appearance and prospects for the future look better. At the same time, however, he states that there is still a place for anyone who is willing to come out. Practice notices are posted in the Arts building and by the Rod-dick gates.

Following is the schedule for this summer:

June 16—McGill at Dawson (postponed).
June 26—Dawson at Georgian.
July 3—Georgian at McGill.
July 10—Dawson at McGill.
July 17—Georgian at Dawson.

McGill Track And Field Club Win Provincial Championships

The first championship of the summer season has come to roost at McGill. The Red Track and Field squad swept through all competition at Molson's Stadium last Saturday to come out with the Provincial Track and Field crown. With a total of 41 points the local collegians far outstripped their closest competition, the Montreal Police, who garnered 24 points. Tied for the third spot with 14 points were the Montreal Track and Field Club and the Toronto "Y" entry.

Coach Hugh Borsman was very impressed with the demonstration of the team and claimed that his squad was rounding out very encouragingly. His attitude towards the fall Intercollegiate meet was that Toronto would have a fairly difficult time of holding on to the title which she won last year. With such men as Brewerton, Gillespie, Ballon, Bartlett and Frank who were all here for the last meet as a nucleus, Coach Borsman has built up a team who have proven their value in last week's Provincial meet.

DOMINION CHAMPIONSHIPS
At the moment the team is pointing for the Dominion Track and Field Championships which will be taking place in Hamilton on August 5, 6, 7. Due to lack of accommodation only eleven men will accompany Coach Borsman to Hamilton though the coach claims that he has at least six other men who are of high enough calibre to participate under the Red colours. The team that will represent McGill at the Dominion championships is as follows:

100 yds.—Hugh Monroe.
200 yds.—Hugh Monroe.
120 yds. hurdles—Derik Brewerton.

440 yds.—Dick Pennyfather, Ferguson MacDowall.
880 yds.—Andy Gillespie.

1 mile — Eddie Ballon, Peter Grahame.
High Jump — Neville Lefcoe.

Broad Jump — Neville Lefcoe.
Shot Put — Bob Bartlett, Joe Ouellet.

Discus — Bob Bartlett, George Frank.
Mile Relay — Dick Pennyfather, Derik Brewerton, Andy Gillespie, Ferguson MacDowall.

Hugh Monroe, the McGill sprinter, is believed potentially to be one of the best that McGill has produced, by Coach Borsman. In last Saturday's meet Hugh came in a close second to Ralph Garber, Queen's sprinter, even though he had a bad start as a handicap in the 100-yard print. In the 200, Monroe, with a pulled muscle to handicap him this time, managed to speed over the distance in the fast time of 22.8 to win the event.

In Pennyfather, McGill has another potential star, according to the Redmen's coach. Although running a very fast race in the Provincial 440, he couldn't hold out against more experienced Sanders of Sherbrooke. However, by the time of the Hamilton meet and by the fall Dick Pennyfather should have reached top form and will definitely rate in Intercollegiate standing" claims Hugh Borsman.

Pete Grahame, Bob Bartlett and Joe Ouellet, the trio from Dawson, came through with some needed points for McGill last Saturday. Grahame who has only been training for five weeks pushed Ballon to a very fast mile and was noted out by D'Arcy Quinn, a former McGillian to come in third. Bartlett, football and baseball star, showed his versatility by putting the shot for a record distance of 41' 11". Joe Ouellet, another newcomer to the squad, came third in the shot put after a very limited amount of training. Between these latter two and George Frank, who represented McGill in the field events in last fall's Intercollegiate meet, McGill will have an imposing entry in the Hamilton meet.

Practices for the tracksters will be going on regularly up until the end of July, with the team entering most of the Friday weekly meets held here in Montreal under the auspices of the Montreal Track and Field Club. However this Friday Coach Borsman is entering only one runner as he will be taking time trials on his team. Eddie Ballon will be the sole entry in the two mile event, from McGill.

PROVINCIAL MEET
The actual meet results from last Saturday's Provincial Championships are as follows:

Dawson Enthusiastic About Sports Program

Dawson College's sports program has been moving ahead at its usual rapid rate during the past week. The boys at St. John are showing a marked interest, competitors and spectators turning out in full force.

The Intramural Softball League is now functioning smoothly with the Grendals and Dirty Sox tied for first place. Grendals defeated Molsons' All-Stars in a drizzle of rain last Thursday by the score of 19-3. Phil Henry's 16 strikeouts was the highlight of the encounter.

In the field of tennis, the first round of the current tournament is due to conclude by Thursday, June 27. Some excellent tennis has been played and it looks like Dawson has some good prospects roaming the Campus. It is hoped to announce the winners by the latter part of July.

M.O.C. Mumbblings by Janet

"We'll meet at the station at nine." Was the first thing I heard about the canoe trip on Sunday and although it did not look too promising, I went and found about ten other hopefuls. The plans had been changed and so Gord went tearing over to the bus terminal to pick up anyone over there. After a brief train journey we arrived NEAR St. Rose (about 1 1/2 miles away). So we all willingly (?) called on our energy and walked.

When we arrived at the dock we found about 14 other hopefuls, but by now the weather was beautifully clear. Finally we started upward, 25 in all, and on to St. Eustache. The eight canoes soon got separated and after much backstraining and what have you we arrived at the one and only obstacle, the rapids (!).

If you could have seen some of those canoes stuck in the middle of the rapids shortly after that we arrived at our destination, Manoir (?) to find some swimming, eating and some other O.C.'s cooking. When everyone had had a swim and dinner, still the last canoe hadn't turned up so the more energetic people started for St. E. while the lazy ones stayed back and exercised their brains.

STILL NO CANOE

Eventually the St. Eustache people came back but still no canoe. It was getting late and the pangs of hunger were beginning to be felt, so the canoes left to return home (that is all but two). They decided to get the later train. After more REST they too left but after a half mile down they stopped to eat (in the middle of the river). Everyone arrived home safe at night although partially cooked and with a couple of things on their mind: (a) What was No. 7 canoe doing all day? (b) Men paddle up, girls paddle back. And to add to that, Who owns the slacks left behind and how did she get home? (Note, these are still safe). Twenty-five in all attended, fourteen girls and eleven men, a summer canoe trip record.

AND THIS WEEKEND

Yes! Three trips have been planned tentatively. A long weekend is coming and an invitation is open to all McGill students, and a special welcome for those starting with us today, the French Summer school. Everyone is welcome but if you want to wear the handsome M.O.C. badge, you can sign up at the Athletics Office in the gym.

TRIPS GALORE

(a) A bike trip. Starting from Mount Laurier, down the Gatineau, through Ottawa and on to Montreal. This is a long hard trip but the best and so if anyone is interested, Bob Munroe is the person to get in touch with at EL 4785. It will be an overnight trip so how about all you hardy cyclists giving Bob a call.

(b) A canoe trip. So far two have been set out depending on obtaining canoes. Plans are under way at press time for a trip at St. Jovite or Ste. Rose planning to sleep under the stars one night. Many plans have to be made but if you are interested call Gord Lindsay at MA 4802 in the evenings as soon as possible. This trip will probably be mixed if enough seem interested.

(c) Another Bike trip. For the day Sunday or Monday. A trip around here just to the water for a dip and not too long. For more on this call the above also (b). Yes, Dominion Day is coming and so come on out you Outingers and join us this weekend. And so along till the weekend with everybody out.

Swinton, Dohn Win Golf Meet

HANDICAPS

Next Meet for July; Undergrads Enter Canadian Open

The divots flew from the clubs of McGill golfers last Monday afternoon, at the Mount Royal Golf Course as the Collegian niblick welders turned out in large numbers in their efforts to gain themselves a berth on the Intercollegiate squad.

Lowest gross score was handed in by George Swinton, smooth stroking Arts student, thus putting him in first place for the afternoon. Hard hitting Science man, Roy Dohn, carded the lowest net score after the individual handicaps had been applied.

AWARDS.
As an added inducement to heighten interest, Major D. Stuart Forbes, McGill Athletics Director, has consented to the donation of awards to the winners of this and future tournaments. These awards will cover all categories of ability, even down to the thirty handicap men.

Two of McGill's outstanding golfers, Frank Pope and Dave Morrison, both members of last year's Intercollegiate team, were unable to play on Monday as they are spending all their spare time getting in trim for the impending Canadian Open Championships at Beaufield. This course is rated one of the most difficult on the Continent and therefore the two Red and White entries have been concentrating on their sand trap recoveries.

Stiff competition from Dawson is expected in the forthcoming intercity competition. Shaping up as the leading mashe menaces at the St. Johns branch are two local boys, Chris Doscher and Graham Cunningham, both low handicappers in the class A group. Both are training avidly for this important event, and have high hopes of upsetting the McGill apple cart. Transportation for this tournament is not as yet definite but is being arranged for by the Athletic board.

According to co-managers Rod Dungan and Bart Love the next field day will be held during the second week of July at one of Montreal's leading golf courses. Information regarding time and place will be posted on notice boards about the campus.

GOLF NOTABLES.
The presence of many of golf-dom's notables in town this week for the Canadian open has aroused enthusiasm to fever pitch and next to the rampaging Royals, golf is the main topic of conversation around sporting circles. Despite the last minute withdrawal of such big names as, Byron Nelson, Lawson Little, Sammy Snead, and others, large numbers of spectators are expected to turn out at the Beaufield course this weekend.

College Scullers Break Into Action Initial Regatta at Lachine Monday

Oarsmen Face Test With Local Teams After 6 Year Layoff

Pointing their shells downstream on Monday, the McGill sculling squad will be out to capture the Eastern Rowing Association regatta. The sponsorship of this first local meet since 1942 is being handled jointly by McGill and Lachine Rowing Clubs.

Although this will be the first time that the Red colours will be seen on the St. Lawrence in over six years, manager Doug Huestis has expressed confidence in the chances of our previously untried scullers. The boys have been out on the river for the past month getting into condition for this first big meet, and at present could row to Three Rivers if the need arose.

The local oarsmen have been entered in seven out of the sixteen scheduled events, ranging from the novice four shell to the senior heavy eight. Strong competition will be on hand from all clubs in the district for the Dominion Day regatta including representatives from Ottawa and Brockville.

All classes being cancelled for the holiday, students should take the opportunity to go out to the Lakeshore and see the Red shells in action.

The following is the list of personnel and the events entered:

Morning Round
1—High school four (135 pounds): No entries McGill or Lachine.
2—Novice Single: D. Elliott or P. Grant, Lachine.
3—High school heavy four: H. H. Charlton, P. Orpin, G. Charlton, L. Descary, bow, Lachine.
4—151-pound shell: G. Barret, stroke, J. Gorman, I. McKay, W. Smith, E. Fuller, spare, McGill; Milt Benison, stroke, A. Whyte, G. Raffignon, G. Fraser, bow, Lachine.
5—140-pound eight: M. Benison, G. Raffignon, P. Grant, R. Moore,

HIGH JUMPER

NEVILLE LEFCOE, McGill star high and broad jumper, who is getting ready for the Dominion Championships, which are taking place in Hamilton on August 5, 6 and 7. Nev represented McGill at the last Intercollegiate Track and Field Meet and has been taking part throughout the winter season in his favorite pastime. In the indoor track meet held here at McGill last March, Nev unofficially broke the McGill high jump record. He is pictured above in the middle of a broad jump.

J. Symons, G. Fraser, W. Elliott, bow, George Spicer, cox, Lachine.
6—Novice four: Barret, stroke, E. Guller, I. McKay, W. Smith, G. Penrose, spare, McGill; H. Charlton, O. Reno, G. Charlton, L. Descary, bow, Lachine.
7—High school singles: No entries Lachine or McGill.
Afternoon Round
8—Junior heavy four: R. Forbes, G. Fortier, J. Gorman, Doug Huestis, McGill; H. Grant, C. Campbell, J. McCulley, R. Jobber, D. Elliott, H. Grant, A. Symons, G. Symons, J. Yerberry, cox, Lachine.
12—Junior single: A. Fraser, Lachine.
13—Senior four: Same entries as event No. 8.
14—No McGill or Lachine entries.
15—Senior single: Alev Whyte, Lachine.
16—Senior open eight: McGill, same entry as event No. 11; Lachine same as junior heavy eight or 140-pound eight.
17—Junior heavy eight: R.

Nostalgia

—John Cosgrove

He closed the book ironically entitled "Be Glad You're Neurotic," picked up his rum and water that was now lukewarm and systematically lit a cigarette and sat there, feeling numb and completely alone and very homesick. He loosened his belt and his collar and necktie and poured another drink. He placed the book back on the table and picked up "The Poems and Fairy Tales of Oscar Wilde—Complete in One Volume." He thumbed through the pages idly and hit on something about:

For this is wisdom, to love to live,
To take what fate or the gods may give,
To ask no question, to make no prayer,
To kiss the lips and caress the hair—
To speed passion's ebb as you greet its flow,
To have, to hold, and in time let go."

Chirped! He closed the book, picked up his drink after refilling with rum and an ice cube and walked over clumsily to the radio, his trousers catching awkwardly around his knees as he crossed.

He flicked on the radio and walked over to the book case and took out the dictionary.

Dependent: to have lost heart or hope.

Depressive: low spirits, reduced activity, feeling of failure, a torpid state.

The radio, now warmed up, began playing "Nostalgia" by David Rose.

Nostalgia: feeling of homesickness; being alone, homesick.

Alone: solitary, or by or to oneself; nothing else is.

Gods! He stepped out of his pants and walked over and poured another drink, downing the one he had in his hands with a grimace and a shudder as he walked. He knew somehow he had to get a hold on himself.

His eyes fell back to the book case. He quickly turned away, cursing books, their titles, their contents, their cursed objective authors. Oh, yes Objectivity... a blessing, some called it. Perhaps so when accompanied by sympathy. At least it was tolerable. But when accompanied by indifference, then it was a curse. Curse them all. The lot of them dilettantes drawing a fat salary. What were they always trying to change human nature for anyway? Didn't they know to do that they need to have faith and vision? And where is faith and vision in their lives? Them and their platitudinous efforts for the world.

What was he drinking for anyway? Why did he drink at all? And furthermore, why did he drink alone? Hadn't he learned by now it was an escape of only a temporary nature? What good was that?

It only returned in the morning again, accompanied by a hangover making it worse than ever before and the world blacker than ever.

He got up from his chair and went over to the radio, stepped into his heaped trousers and went out of the apartment into the street. Why hadn't he worn a coat? But he'd walk faster this way. Where was he going? But what did that matter. How seasonably out of season everything seemed, how inimical the world was now, how completely enigmatical life was anyway!

He walked rapidly down the avenue. Passing the Art Gallery, he saw this week was featuring in three inch type "NUDES," and didn't bother to see by whom or how many. After paying his twenty-five cent admission and ten cent catalog fee he thought to himself how perfectly clever he was and wasn't touring an Art Gallery featuring "NUDES" a perfect way to relieve his obviously broken down libido... ah, yes... delightful lasciviousness.

Looking with intellectual interest he passed by ones called "Morning," "Dusk," "After The Bath," "The Grooming," "Lustiness," "Adonis," "Appollo"—gods, and what was this anyway—and why was it so many nude females and males prove boring when one was intrigued? He entered another room following an arrow above which read "Permanent Exhibition." Here there was "Sir so-and-so," "Lady whatersname," "Night-fall in a Metropolis." What a perfect surrogate this was. "Nostalgia"... he stopped and studied this one.

It was a youth—no an adolescent—no an adult... alone on a hill... a hazy hilly background... a village... a house... a light. Everything done in "ones!"

That was it! He was not only neurotic, a manic-depressive neurotic and nearly a dyspomanic but he was a nostalgic neurotic. Nostalgia. He remembered having looked it up when he had heard David Rose playing a song of that title. He left the Gallery and walked on down the avenue.

Who was she, or he, or it? The hell with them anyway. He didn't give a "pooh" for them. He didn't need them anyway. And what if he was alone. The foolish psychiatrist... the foolish, asinine psychiatrist. He was nuts too. God, he was nuts. How did he ever pass the bar or whatever it is that doctor's have to do to practice anyway? Him and his Freud and Freud with his levels and stages. Him and his need for affection and his desire for recognition. What did the foolish psychiatrist know about what made him tick?

Hal! Yes! What did the foolish psychiatrist or anyone else know about what made him tick? And what did they care, anyway, outside of a fee? And who cared? Who was a friend who cared? And what business it of theirs?

Hal! He had a solution. He'd snub the whole mucky crowd with their superficialities and their get-what-they-can attitude. What were friends anyway but people who would use you for what they could as long as they could or cared or benefited, and then threw you aside like old clothes? Most of them would laugh at cripples and beat little children and be very smug. Them with their answers for everything—nuts!

What? He was back at his apartment and he had slowed down in his walking as he thought and was cold now. He went inside. Ten o'clock. What had he done all day? Why hadn't he eaten?

He saw the nearly empty bottle on the table and walking over to it, he picked it up and flung it into the fireplace. It didn't break, but it was inverted and the amber-thick-liquid flowed stickily out onto the dead ashes making them look like porphyry.

He could get ten hours sleep if he went to bed now.

In his bed-room he put on the radio, and quickly undressed, cleaned up and got into his pyjamas, and climbed into bed taking his "Poems and Fairy Tales of Oscar Wilde—Complete in one volume" with him. "Nostalgia" by David Rose on the radio. What? Again? When had that become so damn popular?

He turned to that poem again... "For this is wisdom... To have, to hold, and in time let go."

He put out the light, shut off the radio and smiled to himself and then laughed. He shut his eyes and started to fall asleep knowing he'd be all right in the morning and every morning after. Oh gods... what was it he had paid that foolish psychiatrist? He must remember to list it in his expense account under the column titled "Donations and Charity."

Vet Organization

It is in the belief that the student veterans at McGill University can accomplish a great deal on their own behalf, that I am writing these few paragraphs.

The Government of Canada has seen fit to invest some thousands of dollars on each veteran desiring University training. The grants have been set at an absolute minimum for a single man, and certainly below an absolute minimum for the married man. It is not necessary to go far for proof of this statement. University rates for a married veteran at the Lachine re-conversion project will be $75 for one room; $85 for two rooms per month. The rooms will be furnished and meals provided. The Government grant for a married veteran is $80.00 a month. Clearly the married veteran must draw on savings and gratuities or have some other source of income to cover the thousand and one expenses of married life. The Government, through its spokesman Major-General Burns, Director General of Rehabilitation, has been quite frank in its attitude to student veteran allowances.

In a speech some time ago, Major-General Burns said, "the student veteran who is not prepared to supplement the government grants with his own earnings and savings is not the kind of man in whose education the country should invest. It was never intended that the grants the students are getting should completely cover the cost of subsistence and education."

Despite repeated representations from various sources to have allowances increased, Ottawa has as yet shown no inclination to change that attitude.

The question of future employment is also of great importance to the student veteran. The present administration at Ottawa has made repeated promises of full employment for Canadians. Promises, however, do not guarantee jobs for student veterans at the end of their University training. With no signs of increased grants and no guarantee of future employment, we can only look to ourselves for any real solution to our problems.

Many things have already been accomplished by organization and co-operative action. Univet Enterprises, Limited, organized on a purely voluntary basis, succeeded in helping many student veterans supplement their allowances by making available a variety of part-time jobs when needed. Paul J. LeBrooy, President of Univet, is quite ready to re-open in the fall provided he can get sufficient support. Univet Enterprises has been well publicized and can be made an efficient employment centre to provide veterans not only with part-time jobs while attending University and during their holidays, but also full-time jobs at the end of their courses. The main problem is the question of staff. Efficient administration requires, at the very least, a paid office staff. Paul LeBrooy is confident that Univet, if properly organized, can easily pay for itself and succeed in placing student veterans in well-paid jobs, part or full time, based on individual abilities.

An example of cooperative action is the Morgan House Student Veterans' Residence on University Street. A large house owned by the University was leased by a group of veterans and furnished with two-decker bunks and bar-rack room tables purchased from War Assets Corporation. Two cooks and a janitor were hired and a monthly rental set to cover house expenses. Today, some thirty veterans are playing only $40.00 a month for room and board at this Residence.

Personal initiative and organization can go a long way in helping us over the rough spots of our University careers. University officials, government agencies, business and private organizations are quite ready to give us every possible assistance in helping ourselves. These few paragraphs are directed particularly towards the Student Veterans' Executive. You have plans for the fall term. We would like to hear from you. We would like to have regular general meetings where all these matters can be thrashed out and action undertaken.

Summer Does Not Mourn

—Bill Richardson

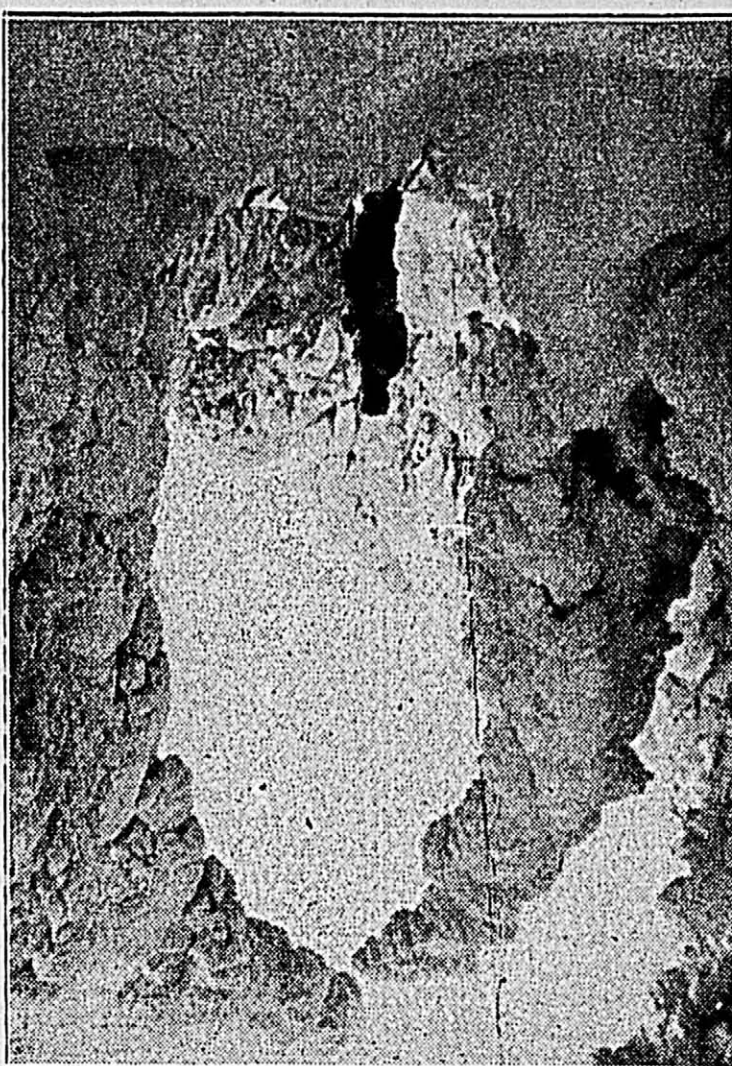

Summer has fallen against across this land 'most hated to the soldier's heart. The Norman sky seeps the dread rain again and the swallows follow in the path of the shells. The sea seethes against the wrecks of ships along the shore and the mines still lie beneath the meadows. The moss grows greener on the castle walls at Cruelly and the grass grows in the foxholes before St. Lo. The indiscriminate rain returns to the old rendezvous of crater and foxhole; the fireflies signal their futility in the rich velvet night of St. Sauveur. The dull golden dusk, swept by fighter and bomber, lingers again in the summer sky, and on the hot sunlit days such as these, the phoenix dust of battle rises from the bloody plain of Caen where the tanks rattled, and at night the voices of frogs in the swamps mock the inexorability of forgetfulness.

Summer returns to this land of large estates like a rich marquessa to her summer home, scattering sows to the servants. And summer snobbishly covers the raw graves with grass to hide them from her eyes. Summer does not mourn in Germany. The season flaunts fertility and mocks the weak, the quick and the blind, and the dead.

All in The BATTLE died a little there in the summer sun, and in the miserable rain, cold to the heart, and in the long cold evenings and in the grey dawns and amid the sickly scent of the grass and the musty freshness of the rain-soaked trees. Those whose graves are overgrown with grass, those who died later further eastward, those who lie now wounded and those who walk unscathed; all in The BATTLE died a little there. Whether the future held a grave or a cot or a suit of civilian clothes, each man died a little there. At Red Dog Beach and Omaha, at Arromanches and Colomby, Fontenay and Balleroy, at Treveres and Carantan, and under the tall granite cliffs before Cherbourg and in the swamps below Carantan. At St. Jean de Daye and at Mont St. Clair. Each man died a little under the shattered roadside crucifix.

This was not true in the march across France, across the yellow fields that fold around Laval; or even by the soft waters of the Marne, where their fathers died; or by the black and ugly piles of slag at Mons, where their fathers died. This was not true of Red October, which stripped the lonely trees along the cobbled roads of Holland. Nor even of the barren flooded wastes, terrible in winter,

Opening lead: King of Diamonds.

In the bidding East and West discover that they have no diamond stopper and that their best play is, therefore, in a major suit, even though they have only seven cards of that suit in the combined hands. After winning the opening lead North continued with two more rounds of diamonds, South overtaking his partner's Jack with the Ace, and West discarded a heart. This refusal to ruff on the part of Declarer is the key play in the hand. South now led the nine of Spades, and Declarer won in his own hand. Cashied the King of Spades, the Ace and King of Hearts, and then ruffed a heart with dummy's Queen of trumps. Returned to his hand via the Queen of Clubs, drew the remaining trumps with the Jack and Ten of Spades, and then led a club to dummy's Ace, which together with the King made the fulfilling tricks.

Nor was it so even in the bitterness of the Ardennes when the pale winter's sun of Belgium fell upon the snowpiled evergreens. But it was true of Normandy because the richness of the land was a constant mockery. The small, claustrophobic field which swarmed with life was nothing more than a prison cell.

The enemy shared our hatred. Here, they said, it is worse than the snows of the steppes, infinitely more terrible than the 'gaunt, skeletal fighting in the ruins at Stalingrad. Worse than the forests of Finland, than the sun-glazed, shimmering battles of Libya. These were theatres of death.

One understands.

For summer does not mourn in Normandy. Winter fell across the land and mourned. Winter stripped the arrogant greenness from the hedgerows. Winter, with a stern hand, silenced the insidious mockery of the frogs at Carantan and anaesthetized the flies that mocked the dead at Caen. Covered the tangled metal wreck that smashed into the deserted summer hill, south-east of Valognes (killing four friends). And where the young lieutenant sat upright in the ditch, staring like a small perplexed child at the attackers crawling over his dead body, there avenging winter hid the scene of such a travesty with the appropriate gesture of a respectful friend.

Winter choked the muzzles of the abandoned 88's. Covered the raw seasonal shred of shrapnel. Winter covered the foxholes. Swept away the sweet cloying odour of death. Winter switched the golden light to grayness. Cut short the day and left the graves in night, in darkness and in peace. Silenced the mocking voice of summer and left only the harsh but friendly wind to grieve.

A year has come and gone, and the dead leaves and then the snow and now the grass have covered the graves of those who died completely there. And for those who died a little, the leaves and snow lie heavy on the heart, and the summer voices of mockery croak waited. Yet waited for what—the fleeting chance to postpone a death, the sickening feel of spurting blood beneath my fingers? I did not ask.

The old man shifted his position to stare grimly at his left wrist. Still I could not move. He grasped the blade in his right hand. I took a step nearer. With one clean movement the blade fell and finger by finger he cut his nails.

Here they are publicly boasting about the fact that they are converting military barracks into University residences. Why it's been over a year now since we moved a military barracks into a University building.

Speaking of Morgan House, the boys seemed to have done very well for themselves in the current Clothing Drive. So successful was their contribution, that one of the fellows found two of his best suits missing. How you doing, Ron?

What—No Response?

As we mentioned last week, we don't pretend to know it all. This column is still wide open for news and general items of interest to our harassed and chronically bankrupt vets. The McGill Daily is in the Union. Come over and talk to us. We get lonely sometimes.

the cocktail lounge at the Mount Royal, etc.).

"I've had a little trouble with my French," he stated, "mostly in restaurants where the waitresses speak no English." This seemed a rather droll remark for a student in a French school, but he explained it by adding that he was in the initial class.

"There are a number of French schools in the United States but none of them have a better reputation than McGill's," he concluded. "However," he confided, "my main reason for coming to Montreal is that I like to travel, and this course seems to be the best method of combining work with leisure."

If only for a period of three or four weeks would be most useful.

In some areas officers of our Regional or Local Employment Offices and of the Provincial Departments of Agriculture have already been recruiting students for farm employment. Any encouragement you, or other officials of your university, are able to give, I assure you, will be most appreciated.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Education in your province for their information.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) A. MacNAMARA,
Deputy Minister of Labour.

CUP—p. 1

by establishing their aims on a university-wide basis.

The administration of the CUP is in the hands of an executive elected annually by the member papers; but this executive is composed of the papers themselves, and not particular individuals. There is no permanent staff, apart from the Treasurer, and all operations and business are conducted by individuals on the member papers.

Thus the main obstacle in the path of the CUP is its rather loose and nebulous organization, but in lieu of the co-operation received last session, next year should prove a very successful one as far as the organization is concerned, with services to Australia, South Africa, as well as the USA being organized.

Students on the McGill Campus have been extended an invitation to attend the dance. Tickets will soon be on sale at the Dawson Canteen and the Union Tuck Shop.

GOLF

Arrangements have been made with the St. Johns Golf Club for a limited number of Dawson students to play on the course. Green fees amount to 75 cents on week days and $1.50 on Saturdays, Sundays and Holidays.

Also scheduled for the course is a golf tournament to be held next Friday, July 5. Starting time has been set at 1.30 p.m. and all participants have been requested by the organizers to call at the Athletics Office to indicate whether or not they can commence at this time. Different arrangements are being made for late starters.

BASKETBALL

Red Sommers is at present conducting a class for beginners in basketball. Training periods have been set for every Tuesday and Thursday evenings. It has been requested by the Athletics Office that all interested call there to sign up for the course as soon as possible.

Jock's reply was: "About Daniel's cell very little is known, but it is generally supposed to have been a bare den furnished with lions. NEW HALL NEEDED FOR MCGILL CLASS

French Summer Session Students to Use Strathcona Building as Well

Enrolment in the McGill French Summer School is expected to be so heavy this year that Strathcona Hall on Sherbrooke street will have to be used to accommodate these students, in addition to Douglas Hall, it was announced yesterday by Prof. J. L. Darbelnet, director of the school. This is the first year that a second building has been required to take care of French Summer School students.

Already approximately 200 from all parts of the United States and Canada had registered for the school, said Prof. Darbelnet, while last year's total registration, in mid-July, was only 170. It is expected that this year's registration will set a new record for this phase of McGill's activities. Highest enrolment to date in the French Summer School was back in 1931, when 228 attended.

Also announced yesterday by Prof. Darbelnet was a list of scholarship winners. The list follows: Mary Allan, McGill student; Jean Barth, Smith College student; Elizabeth Clark, Wilson College student; Ewan S. Clark, teacher of French in Kentville, N.S.; Jeannie Dhalquist, University of California student; Mrs. A. B. Funderburk, teacher of Romance languages at the Women's College, University of North Carolina; Mary-Louise Hall, high school teacher from Swanton, Ohio; Consuelo Houts, high school teacher from Port Orchard, Wash.; Helene Kernan, McGill student; Barbara Marvin, University of California student.

Scholarships have a value of $50-$65. The school opens on June 27, and continues until August 9.
